

For immediate release

WHEN: Tuesday, July 15, 2008, 3:00 p.m.

WHERE: Great Plains Art Museum, 1155 Q Street, Hewitt Place

Lincoln, Neb., July 8, 2008 — Stephenie Ambrose Tubbs, daughter of late historian and best-selling author Stephen Ambrose, will present a talk next Tuesday in Lincoln about her own upcoming book, “Why Sacagawea Deserves the Day Off and Other Lessons from the Lewis and Clark Trail,” to be published this fall by the University of Nebraska Press.

Ambrose Tubbs will speak at 3 p.m. July 15 at Great Plains Art Museum, 1155 Q St. She lectures nationally about her experiences and observations on the Lewis and Clark Trail, which she first followed in 1976 with her father. The talk and a reception at the museum are free and open to the public.

Ambrose Tubbs is also co-author of “The Lewis and Clark Companion: An Encyclopedic Guide to the Voyage of Discovery” and holds two degrees in history from the University of Montana. She currently writes local history and serves on the boards of the Lewis and Clark Interpretive Center Foundation, the Lewis and Clark Trail Heritage Foundation, Friends of Montana PBS and the American Prairie Foundation. She works with conservation and citizens groups to preserve and protect the trail and adjoining wilderness areas.

This talk is presented by the Center for Great Plains Studies at UNL. For more information, call (402) 472-3082.

Contact: Gary Moulton or Linda Ratcliffe, Center for Great Plains Studies, (402) 472-3082.